FASTRAC COURSES

The Foreign Service Institute announces an exciting new pilot in distance learning. The FasTrac Distance Learning Program is an Internet-based distance-learning program providing access to over 500 commercially available courses in such areas as management and supervision, strategic planning, customer service, human resources, project management, and information technology. The courses generally take 2 to 4 hours to complete. Individual participants receive a password, which gives them access to any of the computer-based self-study courses available through FasTrac for one year, during which time the individual can take as many FasTrac courses as they wish. Accounts are intended to be for individuals. These programs are self-paced and available whenever the individual has the time to devote to it. The courses are Internet-based, and can be accessed both in the office and at home. The program is only available to Department of State Foreign Service Officers, Civil Service employees, Foreign Services PIT employees, PSCs, FSNs, and Eligible Family Members (EFMs). For non-State spouses, please check with your agency to see what similar programs are available. The pilot is being funded through FSI; therefore there is no cost to Department of State offices participating in the program. For more information and to register for courses, contact Claudia Thomas, 703-302-7148 or by email at FSIFASTRAC@state.gov
